CHEESE FACTORY BOOSTS CAPITAL; LARGER CAPACITY

Local Plant Opened Here Last Fall Now Shipping a Ton of Cheese.

When the Leaf River Creamery company established a plant in this city last fall for the manufacture of Greek cheese, there was some doubt as to the success of the venture. Today, as an evidence of the business foresight of the firm managers, and of the ability and willingness of Janesville to do everything possible to help a new company make good, the Leaf River Creamery is thriving in its capitalization, and doubling its capacity.

The creamery was incorporated last fall for $60,000 as a Wisconsin firm, but recently the original owners, who are now taking over the plant, have added with their added capital are now taking out a charter as an Illinois corporation with a capitalization which will probably be $150,000.

P. Bougas, head of the Greek Producing Importing company of Chicago, Delianis Brothers, importers, and A. Askounis, owner of a number of stores and restaurants in Chicago, are the three men who have gone in with the Leaf River Creamery company. The new firm, which will operate in addition to the existing plant, two factories for the manufacture of Greek cheese in northern Illinois, will be known as the Universal Creamery company.

The plant was first opened here, but one man was employed. There are now nine on the local payroll, and the managers intend putting in as many as twenty-five as soon as they get more milk. At present the company exports on the average a ton of cheese a day from this one plant. Through their distributor agency, the cheese is sent to the country, finding its greatest market, of course, in the cities where there are large Greek settlements.

The firm has recently sent out an appeal to the milk producers of the city to supply them with forty thousand pounds of milk per day. Since the factory opened last fall, they have paid the association prices asked by the producers, and now agree to continue so doing.

MILK PRODUCERS AT FOOTVILLE ORGANIZE

Secure One Hundred Members in New Association at First Meeting.

Name James Murphy President.

Milk producers in the neighborhood of Footville, organized an association similar to the association here in Janesville at a meeting held yesterday, at which there were nearly two hundred in attendance. In line with the organization a number of such organizations in this section of the state, the Footville producers felt that they would be stronger if they were organized into a unit. Accordingly they called on the Janesville association for assistance and a number of the officers and directors of the local order went to Footville to assist in the organization.

James Murphy was named president of the new association and Fred Benis was elected as secretary. Of the two hundred present at the meeting, about one hundred joined the association, an exceptionally large number, considering that it was the first meeting. The condenser in the foot of the milk can is the first of the kind that community deliver milk, has always paid the association prices, as demanded by the Chicago association and its subsidiary associations.

The producers felt that with a close organization they would be in a better position to deal with any future problems which might arise. With the formation of this association, a large percentage of the dairy farmers of the county are affiliated with some producers' association, and are in a position to place their milk upon the market at the best prices, and in which all the local are represented.

The more Dave thought about Ed Austin's death, the more certain he became that it was in some way connected with Alaire's disappearance; and the loose end by which the tangle might be unraveled, it seemed to him, lay in the hands of Rosa Morales, Jose's sweetheart. That Sanchez was the murderer Dave now had little doubt; but since the chance of apprehending him was small, he turned his attention to the girl. He would make Rosa speak, he told himself, if he had to use force—this was no time for gentle methods. If she knew aught of Alaire's whereabouts or the mystery of her departure from Las Palmas, he would find a way to wring the truth from her. Dave's face, a trifle too somber at all times, took on a grimace of aspect now; he felt a slow fury kindling in his breast.

Years of experience had taught him to be always alert, even during his moments of deepest preoccupation, and so, from force of habit, when he came to the pump-house road he carefully scanned it. In the dust were fresh hoof-prints leading toward the river. Now he knew this road to be seldom used, and therefore he wondered who could be riding it at a gallop in this blistering midday heat. A few rods farther on and his quick eye detected something else—some tiny object that brought him from his saddle. Out of the brush he picked a cigarette butt, the end of which was cold but the paper of which was still wet from the smoker's lips. He examined it carefully; then he remounted and rode on, pondering its significance.

Dave topped out of the thicket and straight across the clearing to the Morales house. Leaving Montrosa's reticent hanging, he opened the door and entered without knocking. Rosa appeared in the opening to another room, her eyes wide with fright at this apparition, and Dave saw that she was dressed in her finest, as if for a holiday or for a journey.

"Where's your father?" he demanded.

"He's gone to Sangre de Cristo. What do you want?"

"When did he go?"

"This morning, early. He—"

"Who's been here since he left?"

Rosa was recovering from her first surprise, and now her black brows drew together in anger. "No one has come. You are the first. And have you no manners to stride into a respectable house—?"

Dave broke in harshly: "Rosa, you're lying. Jose Sanchez has been here within an hour. Where is he?"

"The girl only grew whiter and raised a hand to her breast, she stepped toward her, crying, 'Answer me!'"

Rosa recoiled, and the breath caught in her throat like a sob. "I'll tell you nothing," she said in a thin voice. Then she began to tremble. "Why do you want Jose?"

"You know why. He killed Don Eduardo, and then he rode here. Come! I know everything."

"Lies! Lies!" Rosa's voice grew shrill. "Out of this house! I know you. It was you who betrayed Paulo, and his blood is on your hands, assassin!" With the last word she made as if to retreat, but Dave was too quick; he seized her, and for an instant they struggled breathlessly.

Dave had reasoned beforehand that his only chance of discovering anything from this girl lay in utterly terrorizing her and in profiting by her first panic; therefore he pressed his advantage. He succeeded better than he had dared to hope.

"You know who killed Senor Ed," he cried, fiercely. "The fortune-teller told your plans, and there is no use to deny it."

Rosa screamed again; she writhed; she tried to sink her teeth into her captor's flesh. In her body was the strength of a full-grown man, and Dave could hardly hold her. But suddenly, as the two scuffled from the back room of the house came a sound which caused Dave to release the girl as abruptly as he had seized her—it was the clink and tinkle of Mexican spurs upon a wooden floor.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Water-Cure.

Without an instant's hesitation Dave flung himself past Rosa and through the inner door.

Jose Sanchez met him with a shout; the shock of their collision overbore the lighter man, and the two went down together, arms and legs entwined. The horse-breaker fired his revolver blindly—a deafening explosion inside those four walls—but he was powerless against his antagonist's strength and ferocity. It required but a moment for Law to master him, to wrench the weapon from his grasp, and then, with the aid of Jose's silk neck-scarf, to bind his wrists tightly.

From the front of the little house came the crash of a door violently slammed as Rosa profited by the diversion to save herself.

When finally Jose stood, panting and snarling, his back to the wall, Dave regarded him with a sinister contraction of the lips that was almost a grin.

"Well," he said, drawing a deep breath, "I see you didn't go to the east pasture this morning."

"What do you want of me?" Jose managed to gasp.

There was a somewhat prolonged silence, during which Dave continued to stare at his prisoner with that same disquieting expression. "Why did you kill Don Eduardo?" he asked.

"I? Bah! Who says I killed him?" Jose glared defiance. "Why are you looking at me? Come! Take me to jail, if you think that will do any good."

"It's lucky I rode to Las Palmas this morning. In another hour you would have been across the Rio Grande with Rosa and all her fine clothes, eh? Now you will be hanged. Well, that is how fortune goes."

The horse-breaker tossed his head and shrugged with a brave assumption of indifference; he laughed shortly. "You can prove nothing."

"Yes," continued Dave, "and Rosa will go to prison, too. Now suppose I should let you go? Would you help me? In ten minutes you could be safe."

He inclined his head toward the muddy, silent river outside. "Would you be willing to help me?"

Jose's brows lifted. "What's this? You are saying?" he inquired, eagerly.

"I would only ask you a few questions."

"What questions?"

"Where is Senora Austin?"

Jose's face became blank. "I don't know."

"Oh yes, you do. She started for La FERIA. But—did she get there? Or did Longorio have other plans for her? You'd better tell me the truth, for your general can't help you now." Dave did his best to read the Mexican's expression, but failed. "Senor Ed's death means nothing to me," he went on.

"But I must know where his wife is, and I'm willing to pay, with your liberty. In spite of himself his anxiety was plain."

Jose exclaimed: "He! I understand. He was in your way and you're glad to be rid of him. Well, we have no business fighting with each other."

"Will you tell me—?"

"I'll tell you nothing, for I know nothing."

"Come! I must know."

Jose laughed insolently. Law's face became black with sudden fury. His teeth bared themselves. He took a step forward, crying: "By heaven! You will tell me!"

Seizing his prisoner by the throat, he pinned him to the wall; then with his free hand he cocked Longorio's revolver and thrust its muzzle against Jose's body. "Tell me!" he repeated. His countenance was so distorted, his expression so maniacal, that Jose felt his hour had come. The latter, being in all ways Mexican, did not struggle; instead, he squared his shoulders and, staring fearlessly into the face above him, cried:

"Shoot!"

For a moment the two men remained so; then Dave seemed to regain control of himself and the murder light flickered out of his eyes. He flung his prisoner aside and cast the revolver into a corner of the room.

Jose picked himself up, cursing his captor eloquently. "You gringos don't know how to die," he said. "Death? Pah! We must die some time. And supposing I do know something about the senora, do you think you can force me to speak? Torture wouldn't open my lips."

Law did not trust himself to reply; and the horse-breaker went on with growing defiance:

"I am innocent of any crime; therefore I am brave. But you—the blood of innocent men means nothing to you—Pando's murder proves that—so complete your work. Make an end of me."

Dinner Stories

Some of the inmates of an asylum were engaged in sawing wood and an attendant thought that one old man, who appeared to be working as hard as anybody, had not much to show for his labor.

Approaching him, the attendant soon discovered the cause. The old man had turned the saw upside down, with the teeth in the air, and was working with the back of it.

"Here, I say my man," remarked the attendant, "what are you doing? You'll never cut the wood in that fashion. Turn the saw over."

The old man paused and stared at the attendant. "Did you ever try to saw this way?" he asked.

"Well, no," replied the attendant, "of course I haven't."

"Then hold thy nose, man," was the instant reply. "I've tried both ways, and—impressively—this is easier."

Little Marie stood in the doorway, one hand on the doorknob. For a moment she gazed at her mother, who was preparing to go out.

"Mother," she said, "do you know what I am going to give you for your birthday when it comes?"

"No, dear," answered the mother. "Please tell me."

"A nice hairpin tray with gold flowers on it all around," said the little girl.

"But, my dear," exclaimed the mother, "I have a nice one like that already."

"No you haven't, mother," Marie answered. "I have just dropped it on the floor."

Marie was saying her prayers. "And please, God," she petitioned, "make Portland the capital of Maine."

"Why, Marie!" said her shocked mother. "What made you say that?"

Marie settled herself comfortably in the bed.

"Cause I made it that way in my zamination paper," she said, "and I want it to be right."

TALKS ON CARE OF COWS AT FARMERS' COURSE AT MILTON

By Allen B. West.

The Farmers' Course and Women's Home Conference at Milton opened Monday morning with two meetings, one in the college chapel, especially for girls from the schools, and one in the gymnasium for the men.

In the chapel Miss Amory of the University of Wisconsin gave an interesting demonstration in cooking. The gymnasium Prof. G. C. Humphrey gave an address on "The Proper Feeding of Dairy Cows," and Mr. H. Hastings of Wisconsin gave a lecture on "How to Have Clean Herds in Wisconsin."

Prof. Humphrey's talk was well illustrated by charts which showed the results obtained from the value of cows by their profit and loss.

Mr. Humphrey's first proposition was that in order to feed cows profitably it is first necessary to have good cows. Good cows are not good enough so that any amount of food fed to them will result in profit. Cows must not only be good, but they must be housed and cared for in such a way that they can make the best use of the food. If kept in cold barns, or turned out into the storm and obliged to drink ice water, and with cold feet, they cannot turn it into milk.

Cows must be capable of producing milk and they must be kept in a healthy and contented state if they can be fed for a profit.

Complete Ration.
Just as the farmer needs a "good square meal" so the cows need a ration, or a complete ration. Prof. Humphrey prefers the term "complete ration" to balanced ration, meaning by it a ration which contains all the elements necessary for the bodily maintenance of the animal and for milk production.

The cow is a machine for converting feed into butter fat and in order to do it she must have the proper materials furnished her with which to do her work.

The cow testing associations furnish the basis for good feed, good care and good management. By means of testing one is able to determine what cows are giving returns from their feed and so select rid of those cows that are not making the returns they should.

The June grass pasture furnishes a complete ration but this is available for but a short time. The remainder of the year the complete ration must be provided by furnishing a variety of feeds whose constituents shall be the same as June grass. The June grass is a succulent feed, and in order to have the maximum milk flow it is essential that some succulent feed be provided. It must be either green clover or green oats, sorghum, green clover or similar feed, or corn silage. In addition to that there should be hay of some sort and this should be supplemented by grain to furnish the ration.

Rule for Feeding.

A good rule for feeding is as follows: Three or four pounds of succulent feed daily to every one hundred pounds live weight of the cow. One pound of hay for every one hundred pounds live weight, and of grain, matured and ground, for every three hundred pounds of milk, or seven pounds of grain mixture to each pound of butter fat. For the June grass and Jersey cows one pound of grain mixture is usually sufficient for each hundred pounds of milk for the Holsteins the usual rule is one pound to four of milk.

The farm grown grains, oats, corn and barley should be supplemented with dried feeds, such as dried distillers, or dried brewers grain.

When feed, all meal or some concentrate, the kind to be selected depends on price and what may be obtained from the dealer.

Prof. Humphrey compared the cow to a threshing machine. Unless good grain goes into the machine it is impossible to get it out at the spout. The machine over so good. Unless a cow is fed properly she cannot produce milk in an amount to give profit.

How to Have Clean Herds.
Mr. Hastings followed on "How to Have Clean Herds." The principal diseases are tuberculosis, abortion and brucellosis. One-tenth of the cows in this vicinity have and have contracted the tuberculosis. In some parts of the state one-fourth of the cows are affected. Bovine tuberculosis is a transmissible disease. It is caused by a germ that enters the body from outside. This germ is a different germ from that which causes tuberculosis in man, but the bovine tuberculosis is transmitted to children.

There are two ways in which the farmer may get tuberculosis in his herd. First, he may buy it. Second, he may get it from the cheese or butter factory in which he sends his milk or cream.

To guard against the first, one must know the condition of the herd from which he is buying stock. Unless one buys from herds positively known to be healthy, he runs one chance in ten of getting a diseased animal.

To guard against the second source, the whey, skimmed milk or butter should be heated to a temperature of from 150° to 155° Fahrenheit. This will kill the germ.

A third source of contagion may be the cows coming into contact in neighboring pastures along the line fences.

All herds should be tested at least once a year with the tuberculin test. This is a simple process and with two exceptions pick out the diseased animals. These exceptions are the animals in the very first stages of the disease and those in a very advanced stage.

Because it will not detect those who are recently infected it is necessary to make the annual test. It is one to be sure to keep clean herds.

On Monday afternoon Prof. Humphrey continued this talk along the line of feeding cows by discussing "Dairy Feeds and How to Buy Them."

Mr. Hastings continued his talk on tuberculosis and told of different ways of safeguarding the milk supply. In the chapel Mrs. Amory gave to the women a practical demonstration on "Reducing the Costs Through the Use of Substitutes in Bread and Cake Making" and Miss Hastings discussed the various textiles, cotton, wool, silk and linen and under the title "How to Buy Cloth Intelligently" gave a demonstration of practical tests of different fabrics to determine whether or not they are adulterated.

DUTCH CAPITALISTS HANDLE 1917 GERMAN TOBACCO CROP

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Amsterdam, Netherlands, March 22.—This year's export of tobacco to Germany is to be financed by the Netherlands Association of Tobacco Dealers, a company specially formed here for that object with a capital of $20,000,000. With a view to maintaining its exchange rate, Berlin stipulates that German treasury bills of two years' term shall be taken in payment for such goods, the bills being guaranteed by the Reichsbank and six other leading German banking institutions. Should the present shipping conditions continue, or the shortage of cargo space become such that the Netherlands East India tobacco crop cannot be transported to its destination, the dealers will doubtless be made to ship the tobacco, or a large part thereof to America. This would obviate the customary pilgrimage of American buyers to the Amsterdam sales.

ON STREET PAVING

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
